Read the following passage about Gender Equality in Vietnam and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 40.

[I] Gender equality in Vietnam has made significant strides over the past few decades, especially in urban areas. [II] The government has implemented policies aimed at closing the gender gap in education, health, and employment. [III] However, many challenges remain, particularly in rural areas where traditional gender roles are more deeply ingrained. [IV] Despite improvements, women in Vietnam continue to face discrimination in the workplace, unequal access to leadership positions, and limitations in their economic opportunities.

The primary drivers of gender inequality in Vietnam include cultural norms and economic barriers. Women are often expected to take on the majority of household duties, limiting their time and energy to pursue careers. In rural areas, these traditional expectations are even more pronounced, with many women relegated to agricultural labor or domestic work. On the other hand, urban areas offer better opportunities for women in terms of education and employment, though the gender pay gap remains substantial.

Efforts to promote gender equality in Vietnam must address both societal attitudes and structural barriers. For instance, the government needs to strengthen laws ensuring equal pay for equal work and improve access to affordable childcare, particularly in rural regions. Moreover, there is a growing need to empower women through leadership training programs and increase their representation in political and economic decision-making.

Ultimately, gender equality is not only a matter of fairness but also of national development. Ensuring that women have equal opportunities to contribute to society benefits the economy and fosters a more just and prosperous nation.

Scientists believe they now have scientific evidence to prove that ecosystems work better when there is a greater variety of species within them. This biodiversity is being lost, destroying natural mechanisms that could repair the damage caused by man.

Findings show that losing plants and animals is not only reducing our quality of life but actually endangering our very existence. We cut down rich rainforests and replace them with one species plantations, such as pine and eucalyptus. We plough up meadows rich in different grasses and herbs and replace them with one grass, for instance rye or wheat.

When a natural ecosystem is simplified the basic processes in the ecosystem are altered and even damaged. Without their biodiversity, they are not able to serve as the natural cleaners of our planet. No longer are they able to absorb the carbon dioxide that is being produced in excess. The result is global warming, caused by the increase in the 'greenhouse effect', and ultimately, or even sooner, there will be a change in the world's climate.

Do you feel like your teenager is spending most of the day glued to a phone screen? You're not too far off. A new survey from the Pew Research Center reveals the surprising ways that technology intersects with teen friendships — and the results show that 57 percent of teens have made at least one new friend online. Even more surprisingly, only 20 percent of those digital friends ever meet in person.

While teens do connect with their friends face-to-face outside of school, they spend 55 percent of their day texting with friends, and only 25 percent of teens are spending actual time with their friends on a daily basis (outside of school hallways). These new forms of communication are key in maintaining friendships day-to-day — 27 percent of teens instant message their friends every day, 23 percent connect through social media every day, and 7 percent even video chat daily. Text messaging remains the main form of communication — almost half of survey respondents say it's their chosen method of communication with their closest friend.

While girls are more likely to text with their close friends, boys are meeting new friends (and maintaining friendships) in the gaming world-89 percent play with friends they know, and 54 percent play with online-only friends. Whether they're close with their teammates or not, online gamers say that playing makes them feel "more connected" to friends they know, or gamers they've never met.

When making new friends, social media has also become a major part of the teenage identity- 62 percent of teens are quick to share their social media usernames when connecting with a new friend (although 80 percent still consider their phone number the best method of contact). Despite the negative consequences-21 percent of teenage users feel worse about their lives because of posts they see on social media — teens also have found support and connection through various platforms. In fact, 68 percent of teens received support during a challenging time in their lives via social media platforms.

Just as technology has become a gateway for new friendships, or a channel to stay connected with current friends, it can also make a friendship breakup more public. The study reveals that girls are more likely to block or unfriend former allies, and 68 percent of all teenage users report experiencing "drama among their friends on social media."
