I watched a great science-fiction film last week. It was about two people who decided to live in the ocean. They could breathe underwater because they had special masks and flippers. They moved very quickly. They could even walk slowly on the waves. They met some sharks and they started talking to each other in a different language. I didn't like that part very much. It was quite strange and not believable. I watched it to the end, though, and I'm glad I did because the end was amazing. The two main actors started to look like fish! They built their own underwater castle and lived happily ever after.
