In conclusion, MBG is a crucial initiative that helps address malnutrition, supports educational success, and strengthens community ties. Expanding and sustaining this program can significantly contribute to Indonesia's efforts in improving public health and social welfare. Therefore, continuous support from the government, private sectors, and society is essential to ensure the long-term success of MBG.

Secondly, MBG improves students' learning abilities. Research indicates that children who receive proper nutrition perform better academically. With access to free, well-balanced meals, students can focus better in school, leading to higher attendance rates and better overall education outcomes.

Makan Bergizi Gratis (MBG) is a government and community-driven program in Indonesia aimed at providing free nutritious meals to underprivileged individuals, particularly children and students. This initiative addresses the issue of malnutrition and food insecurity, which remain significant challenges in many regions of the country. By ensuring access to healthy meals, MBG contributes to improving public health, academic performance, and overall well-being.

Lastly, MBG fosters social solidarity and community involvement. The program encourages local businesses, non-governmental organizations, and volunteers to participate in meal distribution efforts. This collaboration strengthens community bonds and raises awareness about the importance of nutrition and food security.

Firstly, MBG helps combat malnutrition, especially among children from low-income families. Many Indonesian children suffer from stunting and other nutrition-related issues due to a lack of access to sufficient and healthy food. By providing free nutritious meals, the program supports their growth and development.
