4. Nominalisation

Form	A verb can be turned into a noun by adding a suffix at the end of the word. Some examples include: -tion, -ment, -al, -ence, -ure, -sis
Use	Nominalisation is the process of changing a word, in this case, a verb into a noun. This is often used in academic writing to make sentences sound more formal, abstract, or focused on the idea rather than the action. When we use nominalized forms instead of verbs, we focus on products and results rather than processes.
Examples	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Original: The team reacted quickly to the situation. Nominalisation: The team's reaction to the situation was quick. • Original: The police will investigate the crime scene. Nominalisation: The investigation will be conducted by the police. • Original: The project failed because there were not enough resources. Nominalisation: The reason for the project failure was the lack of resources.
