

Why are talent shows good for children?

Fill in the gaps with the words from the box:

unleash stardom root stand tall silver platter
poise benchmarks grounded

A stage for everyone

Today reality TV has provided a stage for people from all walks of life to 1) _____ their talent. One doesn't need to have an uncle, dad, or connections into showbiz to audition for a reality show. They will be judged and will clear each round purely on their talent.

Confidence Builder

Children who are naturally shy learn how to build their confidence on a public platform and step into the spotlight with 2) _____. They get a chance to work with professionals like voice and dance coaches who help them hone their skills and also share industry secrets. These experiences empower children to 3) _____, embrace challenges, and project their authentic selves with pride.

Bonding time with Parents

Many parents make unlimited sacrifices to make their children's dreams come true. From taking them to practice, working with them, driving them to auditions. They use it as an opportunity to bond with their children and ensure that they stay 4) _____. When it comes to the show itself, parents' support is invaluable: they 5) _____ for their children hard no matter what.

Setting Goals and Motivation

Goal-setting becomes a guiding star as children embark on the path to their talent show debut. These goals serve as both beacons of motivation and 6) _____ for progress. Nurturing their determination requires a delicate balance of gentle encouragement and the fuel of their innate passion.

An international platform

For the truly unique and gifted, performance-based reality TV offers the world on a 7) _____. A child artist can grow leaps and bound much more than he or she normally would, if left to the usual way of things. A high-profile and credible TV show can sky rocket a young aspiring artist to international acclaim. The world becomes their stage, and their talent no longer their own. It accomplishes their young lives' dream of pop 8) _____.

