Traffic in the City

Many people travel to work or school every day. In the city, streets are often busy in the morning and evening. Cars, buses, and motorcycles move slowly because there is so much traffic. People walking on sidewalks need to be careful when crossing the road. There are traffic lights to help control the flow of cars and people.

Some people ride bicycles because it is healthy and good for the environment. Others take public transport like buses and trains to avoid traffic jams. Public transport is often cheaper and faster than driving a car. However, during rush hours, buses and trains can also be crowded

Governments try to make traffic better by building more roads and encouraging people to use public transport. Following traffic rules, like wearing seat belts or helmets and stopping at red lights, is important to stay safe.
