Lost in the Jungle

A hiking trip turned into a terrifying adventure for two Australian friends, Mia and Josh. During a holiday in South America, they went on a jungle trek in the Amazon rainforest.

The weather was warm and sunny when they started the trek with a local guide. They were excited to explore the jungle and see wildlife. But after lunch, a sudden heavy storm hit. Trees swayed in the strong wind, and the rain was falling hard. The guide shouted, "Stay close!", but in the chaos, Mia and Josh got separated from the group.

They shouted for help, but there was no answer. They were completely lost in the dense forest. Their phones had no signal, and they had very little food or water. As night fell, they made a small shelter using branches and leaves. It was a long, cold night filled with strange sounds.

The next morning, they decided to follow a small river, hoping it would lead to a village or camp. They walked for hours through mud and thick plants. Suddenly, they saw smoke in the distance! They followed it and finally arrived at a small wooden hut.

Inside was an old man who lived alone. He gave them food and clean water, and let them rest. Later that day, he called the rescue team with his radio. After spending two nights in the jungle, Mia and Josh were finally safe. They were tired and hungry—but grateful to be alive.
