From the Sahara to the Himalayas

David Chen is a famous wildlife photographer from Australia, but he has done many exciting and interesting jobs in his life. He became famous in the year 2010 when he was in a project called "Desert Explorers." He was part of a group of people who travelled across the Sahara Desert for four months. They lived in tents and had to bring all their water. They took photos of unusual desert animals and special plants.

Since then, he has made many photo books about nature including "Coral Worlds," "Mountain Life," and "Rare Animals." These books have taken him to many far places. He went to the Himalayas where he stayed for two months taking pictures of snow leopards. It was very cold, and a big storm made his group change their path and lose some of their things.

David still travels to different places to take photos of wild animals. He has written three books with his pictures and often visits schools to show students what he has seen.
