Bangkok, the capital of Thailand, is well-known for its heavy traffic jams. Every day, thousands of cars, buses, and motorbikes crowd the streets, causing long delays, especially during rush hours. Many people are stuck in traffic jams for a long time and even miss school or work, which often makes them feel tired, bored, and stressed. The city's rapid growth, increasing population, and limited public transportation options mainly contribute to the problem. More people move to the city to live and work, and there are more vehicles every year. Although the city is growing fast, the public transportation system is still not enough. There are not enough buses or trains, so many people drive their own cars or ride motorbikes. This causes even more congestion, resulting in many other serious issues like air pollution, accidents, etc. To solve this problem, the government is building more BTS Skytrains and MRT subway lines. These are modern public transport systems that help people travel faster and easier. The government wants more people to use public transport to reduce congestion. However, traffic in Bangkok remains a daily challenge for both citizens and tourists.
