LIVEWORKSHEETS

Julia: Exactly! And that affects everything. I was also reading that the (2) _____ of many products is being disrupted because of extreme weather. We're seeing shortages and delays in trading, especially with food.

Feh: It's incredible how much the food supply chain depends on stable weather patterns. When something like flooding or drought happens, the (3) _____ of water can destroy entire fields, ruining crops. It's a real problem for agriculture.

Julia: Definitely. But I think there are solutions, like (4) _____ materials instead of throwing them away. Companies are beginning to use recycled materials to reduce waste.

Feh: That's a great point. It's not just about recycling, but also finding ways to squash the amount of waste we produce in the first place. Every little change counts.

Julia: Absolutely! And we need to focus on reducing (5) _____ from industries as well. The fewer pollutants in the air, the better for the planet's long-term health.

Feh: Yeah, it's all interconnected. We can't ignore any of these issues if we want a sustainable future.

IV. There are 6 mistakes in the passage below. Find and correct them.

By the time the climate summit took place, many experts have already presented their findings on global warming. Scientists had observed alarming patterns of temperature rise and extreme weather events, which they had studying for years. Several countries had committed to reducing carbon emissions, but the progress had been slow. By the year 2030, many regions will have been experiencing prolonged droughts and severe flooding due to rising sea levels. It was clear that the planet's ecosystems had been severely damage over the decades, and urgent action was required. While many governments had been made ambitious pledges, not all of them had follow through with effective policies. The discussions at the summit made it evident that, although progress had made, much more needed to be done to combat the ongoing climate crisis.
