Taken into Custody

Define these words OR translate them into your native language:

provide= _____ arrest= _____ strict= _____ procedure= the way you must do something= _____

Custody means taking care of a person or thing. If you have custody, it's your job to keep the person or thing safe. You are responsible for the person or thing.

In your opinion, what does "being responsible for" someone mean? _____

When the police arrest someone, that person is in their custody. The police have to be careful when they take someone into custody. They must take care of that person. They must make sure the people are healthy and safe. People in custody can't leave. They need the police to provide them with what they need.

Give 3 examples of things a person in custody might need: 1)_____ 2)_____ 3)_____ What could make a person in custody feel unsafe? _____

Sometimes, the police take things when they arrest someone. This could be clothes, phones, or money. The police keep these things safe until the person is free to go. If the things are against the law, like drugs, they don't give them back.

If you were arrested and taken into custody now, what things would the police need to take from you? _____

Why do you think the police take legal things, like money or phones, from the person? _____

The police have strict rules and procedures they must follow when taking someone into custody. These rules protect the rights of the individual and ensure that everyone is treated fairly and with respect. If the police break these rules, the person in custody may ask the court to punish the police.

Tell 2 things the police could do that would break the rules: 1)_____ _____ 2)_____
