Int: Penny Greer is a successful photographer, who runs her own company. Penny, is it important to take a college photography course if you want to do this work?

P: I think so – it changed my life. I'd already realised how creative taking photos could be, and my college course was heavily commercial, which put me off at first. My idea was that photography was 'art' and I had little interest in taking photos to sell things. I'm glad I got over that, but above all what I learnt there was how to use light and to apply that understanding to whatever I want to shoot. Once you get that, you lose the fear of making mistakes.

Int: What made you specialise in wedding photography?

P: After college, I did some work for wedding photographers who had quite traditional ideas of how to express the character of the event. A wedding's an emotional day, and photography to me is an emotional process. I'd never thought about it till then, but putting the two together made sense. I was keen to experiment with breaking the rules by being more a fly on the wall – catching what's happening without interfering.

Int: Then you set up your own company – how do you attract customers?

P: I've advertised a lot in the past year, and built a good website to showcase my work. I have print ads in a few wedding magazines, and ads on their sites. The thing that's really worked is the postcard. I get a mailing list monthly of new brides and mail out postcards. I get over eighty percent of my calls, meetings and bookings from this source. The ultimate goal is to get the majority of business through personal recommendation.

Int: How do you spend a typical working day?

P: I'm usually stuck at my computer, mostly editing and working on the jobs I shot the previous weekend. While doing this, I also deal with phone calls and emails from interested customers and set up meetings. About a tenth of my time's meeting clients and getting to know them and only around a fifth is actually shooting, the rest is working on the shots to prepare them for presentation.

Int: How do you get what you want in a wedding photo?

P: Obviously it has to capture the powerful emotion of the occasion. I find it's when everybody's comfortable because nothing's worrying them – that's when they stop acting for the camera and I achieve what I'm looking for. Some weddings I photograph, the couple want things a little different – they wear something unusual and their guests have to wear special clothes, so the photos turn out pretty bizarre. Those shots can be the most fun to take.

Int: What do you love best about your job?

P: Now I have greater freedom to move in different directions – my decisions are trusted and I don't have to try and adapt to the various tastes of other people. I'm both scared and proud to make my career choices and being my own boss is something I couldn't live without. In the early days it was fulfilling to be able to create and work on the shots from beginning to end but now I'm hoping to take on an assistant to deal with certain parts of the process.

Int: What advice do you have for younger photographers?

P: The more you shoot, the more you grow. Some people worry they'll end up with too many photos but you just have to learn to delete them. It's not about doing something different at every job. It's more about using the camera until you're 100 percent confident in what you're doing. Sometimes it works, sometimes it doesn't, but I always learn from it, and it keeps me fresh. Besides, once you start running a business, you don't always get to shoot as much as you'd like, so do as much as you can now!

- C. take every chance to perform in public.

30. Rosie tells us about a friend who

- A. avoids singing on recordings.
- B. prepares in her car before performing.
- C. suffers very badly from nerves on stage.

Int: R: Int: R: My guest today is Rosie Carnes, who teaches people to sing. Rosie, is it difficult to sing well?

R: Well I guess the first thing to mention is that when we sing, we ourselves cannot truly know how we sound to anyone who's listening to us. We have to sense what it must be like through a combination of what we can hear and what it feels like to make sound. When I was a child and I created a sound I felt excited. When I take in breath, I know I'm not just taking in air, I'm taking in the basis of sound. That's exciting too!

Int: And is it important to warm up before you sing?

R: Yes, you'll ruin your voice if you're not warmed up, and you'll sound rubbish. Your throat is quite small, and it's what you have to push the air through into your mouth, which is what will frame your music. But in fact you need to begin with your spine, which wants to be stretched and made flexible. That way, your whole body is prepared. The importance of whole body readiness cannot be overstressed. The way you stand affects the way you sing.

Int: And your knees are important apparently.

R: That's right. Your knees want to be over your heels rather than the balls of your feet, and not completely straight, but a little angled. Avoid crossing your legs tightly, or pressing them against each other, because you'll be too tense.

Int: And to maintain your voice in good condition?

R: That's crucial. As a professional singer, you've got to look after your voice, your pride and joy, your source of income. If you get a cold or an irritated throat, steam is usually very effective at reducing the inflammation, so get a bowl of steaming water and sit over it with a cloth on your head.

If that's not possible, sucking a sweet or two may help repair the voice – although the important thing is keeping it in good condition in the first place, for which you need to drink anything up to eight glasses of water every day, and avoid smoky places, shouting, that kind of thing.

Int: And what about learning the words of songs?

R: That's a big part of being a singer. There are various ways of trying to push the limits of your memory, but mine's never been very strong. I've driven several friends to the edge of despair when they're trying to test me, and now I go it alone, going over them again and again and again during the course of an ordinary day, until the meaning sinks down into me. It's never easy. Anyway, it takes all sorts, and I hope that people will find their own way.

Int: What advice do you have for wannabe singers?

R: Well, nothing is easy about singing. It's all hard work, I'm afraid to report, but then the rewards are beyond anything else, so it's a fair deal. So, if you're wanting to have a career as a singer, and if you've got a good voice, then treasure it. Don't panic if it does get hurt – it's impressive how it'll recover. The important thing is to use it. Get out there. Take every chance you can to sing in public. This experience will also help to feed and build your ambition to go on, to be better. Singing on stage to an appreciative audience is as good as life gets.

Int: And if public performance isn't your thing?

R: Well, if you've got a good voice – then maybe you'll be like my friend Diana. Although she conquered most of her anxiety about performing in public a few years ago, she still prefers studio singing, performing directly for CDs and so on. Nobody really sees her outside her home and the studio. Even warming up her voice for a recording performance is something she does in private, making weird noises while sitting in her car outside the studio building. I think she's alarmed a few passers-by in her time!
