Behind the Scenes

There are many jobs in the movie industry. Many of the jobs are actually not actors, but people who work behind the scenes.

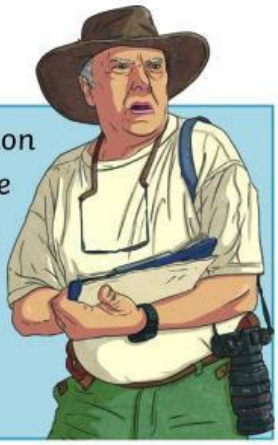
One essential job is the screenwriter. A screenwriter is the author of the script for the movie. The screenwriter takes an idea for a movie and writes the lines for the actors.

Another job is the producer. The producer of a movie is in charge of overseeing the entire process. This means the producer has to make sure that each person is doing their job. A producer plans and organizes the creation of a movie.

A director leads the actors and actresses. The director makes sure they are doing their jobs effectively. They help the actors do the best they can to portray their roles.

A director of photography is in charge of the cameras for a movie. They ensure that the cameras are focused in on the right person or scenery at the right time. They must be creative and talented in art and photography.

A costume designer plans costumes for the actors and actresses. The costume designer has to be creative and have a talent for portraying a specific time period. The costume designer is much like a fashion designer. They have to have knowledge of different fabrics and materials to make the needed costumes.



A location manager is in charge of a specific location for filming for a movie. Many movie scenes are filmed in many different locations. So a location manager can help with coordinating catering and costumes at the site. The location manager has to make sure that the movie company has permits to film at a specific place.

Behind the Scenes

Props are very important in creating scenes for movies. A prop master plans, obtains, and arranges the props for the movie set. The prop master has to carefully plan the props so they match with both the time and place of the movie scene.

A key grip is the person in charge of the equipment that carries the cameras. The key grip has to make sure that the camera holders, tripods, and stands are in working order. They have to be able to fix these items if they stop working during filming.

As you can see, it takes many people to film a movie. All of these team members work behind the scenes to make the movie the best it can be.
