Gemma's Journey to Her Dream Career in Fashion Design

Contrary to many of her friends, Gemma knew exactly what she wanted to do after she finished secondary school. Although she did well in academic subjects, she preferred designing and creating women's clothing. Gemma hoped to find a job soon because she wanted to support her grandmother, who had raised her.

However, she realized that earning a certificate in fashion and garment design would give her more career opportunities. So she attended career orientation sessions, where she received valuable advice from experienced garment teachers from vocational schools.

To prepare for her studies, Gemma looked into different programs that offered courses in fashion, garment, and textile. She also practised cutting and sewing with a local tailor to improve her practical skills. Thanks to her determination and discipline, she developed her skills very quickly.

When she finally graduated, she already owned a small tailor shop that attracted many young customers. Her shop became popular for its trendy and custom-made outfits. She had such an inquiring mind that she never stopped learning. Gemma continued to attend short courses and workshops to stay updated with the latest trends and techniques, ensuring long-term success in her dream career.

Factors Influencing Students' Career Choices

Planning a career path is never easy. While personal preferences matter, researchers have shown that several external factors also influence teenagers’ career decisions.

Parental expectations often have the greatest impact on students' choices, especially when they are young. For instance, parents working in business may expect their children to follow the same path. However, conflicts can arise when students are not interested in the careers their parents suggest. Peer pressure is another powerful factor. Teenagers are easily influenced, so they may choose a profession just because many of their friends find it appealing.

In addition, career advice found on the Internet can also shape students' decisions. While online sources can be useful, not all the information is reliable or realistic. Cost is another important factor. Many students consider tuition fees and living expenses when planning their future. Some choose to study and work abroad, while others prefer more affordable options.

All these influences can affect students either positively or negatively. Since career planning is crucial for long-term success and job satisfaction, it's important that students receive proper orientation and guidance from trustworthy sources before making any final decision.

Future Job Trends: What to Expect in the Next 10 Years

Many people are curious about how the job market will change in the future. (30) _____ and fast-paced, technology jobs will continue to rise. Roles such as software engineers and internet security experts are likely to be in high demand. (31) _____, many people can still work in this field if they have good technical skills.

Food service careers will also remain popular. However, wages may not rise quickly even though job growth is expected. On-the-job training is often enough, but formal cooking skills and hygiene knowledge can support promotion. Education careers are another area of growth. (32) _____ more people are born, more teachers and librarians will be needed. Most education jobs will require a college degree, but they will likely offer higher salaries.

(33) _____, students should consider current trends when choosing a job. Thinking about job demand and required skills now can help them build a stable and rewarding future.

Writing Sample

There are many jobs I like, but my favourite future job is to be a graphic designer. I've always loved drawing and using technology to create things. I think being a designer is an exciting job because it allows me to be creative and express ideas through images. To do this job well, I need to learn how to use design software and improve my art skills. I also need to be good at teamwork and time management because I will work with clients and follow deadlines. In the future, I hope to design posters, websites, and logos. This job suits me because I'm creative, hard-working, and love working with visuals.
