

Volunteers Are Going to Plant One Million Trees in Kenya

Will vs Going to

In Kenya, a big environmental project is starting soon. A group of volunteers is going to plant one million trees across the country. The project will begin in June 2025, and it will continue for five years.

The group says it is going to work with schools, farmers, and city workers. "We are going to teach people how to plant trees and take care of them," says the project leader. "This will help the environment and fight climate change."

The volunteers will travel to different areas every month. In some places, they are going to plant fruit trees to help families grow food. In other places, they will plant trees to protect the land from strong winds and floods.

Many young people are going to join the project. A student named Amina says, "I am going to help in my town. We will plant trees near the school and the river."

The government supports the plan. "This project will make Kenya greener," says a government official. "We are going to help with tools, water, and transportation."

The group also wants to teach people about climate problems. They are going to visit schools and show videos about the importance of trees. They hope more people will care about the planet and make small changes in their lives.

By 2030, the team hopes they will finish planting all one million trees. "It's a big job," says one volunteer. "But we are going to do it step by step."

Volunteers Are Going to Plant One Million Trees in Kenya

eee
Will vs Going to

- What is the group going to do?
- When will the project start?
- What are the volunteers going to teach people?
- Where are the volunteers going to plant trees?
- What does the government say the project will do?
- What does Amina say she is going to do?
- What do they hope people will do?
- How do they say they are going to finish the job?