University is a time for studying and making friends, but it can also be very expensive. Many students choose to get part-time jobs to help pay for their costs. Most student jobs are in retail, like shops and department stores, or in hospitality, such as cafes, restaurants, and bars. Common jobs include shop assistant, bartender, waiter or waitress, and cinema staff. During the school year, students usually work part-time, but they can work full-time during holidays.

Jun is a student from Thailand who worked as a shop assistant last year. He said, "I needed to work because I spent all my money in the first few weeks of term! I found a job in a sports shop on Saturdays. It was great! I learned a lot about communication skills, had a good time, and made some friends."

There are many holiday jobs available in the summer too, especially in tourism. Eva is from the UK and got a full-time job at a museum because she is studying history. She said, "I wrote to the museum director, and she offered me a job. It was perfect! I helped visitors and told them about the exhibits. I gained valuable work experience. I'm glad I did it!"
