If a student wants to become an engineer, they should focus on excelling in math and science subjects. Taking advanced courses in physics and calculus is beneficial. They should also participate in extracurricular activities like robotics clubs or engineering competitions. Pursuing a degree in engineering from a reputable university is essential, and gaining internships or co-op experiences can provide practical skills.

To become a soccer player, the student should join a local soccer team and train regularly. They need to work on their fitness, skills, and game strategies. Attending soccer camps and participating in competitions can help them get noticed by scouts. Balancing academics and sports is crucial for long- term success.

For a career as a skincare specialist, a student should complete a specialized training program in cosmetology or esthetics. Apprenticeships under experienced professionals can provide hands-on experience. Additionally, taking business classes can be useful if they plan to open their own salon. Continuing education on the latest skincare techniques and products is important for staying updated in the field.
