Online learning has become increasingly common in higher education. Do the advantages of this development outweigh the disadvantages?

overshadow	argument	advocates	aspects	convinced	assert associated	consequence	arguments	point	drawbacks	moreover

In the area of advanced/advancement technology, online learning has been increasing/increasingly popular. It is a fact that it has revolutionized the way students pursue education. I am _____ that the merits of this _____any possible demerits, and I will put forth my _____in the upcoming paragraphs.

On/In the one hand, there are several benefits which are _____with online learning. First and foremost, a _____positive aspect of this lies in its role in improve/improving accessibility for students from all backgrounds. In/ As a result, learners can attend courses offered by international institutions without the need to relocate. In addition, _____of this view emphasize that online platforms promote self-paced learning and flexibility. For example, a working student can watch recorded lectures in the evening after their shift, allowed/ allowing them to pursue a degree without sacrificing their job or family responsibilities.

On/ In the other hand, online education is not without any_____. Firstly, there is a convincing _____that it may reduce face-to-face interaction/ interactive, which is crucial for develop/ developing communication and teamwork skills. As a _____, students in some cases may feel isolated or struggle with self-discipline. _____, proponents of this view _____out that technical issues, such as/ like poor internet connection or lack of digital devices, can hinder the learning process and inevitable/ inevitably widen the educational gap between students from different socio-economic backgrounds.

In conclusion, it is obvious that online learning has been of increasing/increasingly popularity. I firmly _____that the positive _____of this outstrip any negative ones as long as effective solutions are implemented/ implementing to address the challenges.

LIVEWORKSHEETS