The summer of 2023 was a big year for the travel industry. International travel increased, reaching 84% of its levels before the COVID-19 pandemic. In some European countries, like France and Denmark, tourism even grew beyond pre-pandemic levels. However, this rise in tourism also created serious environmental problems.

One major issue is climate change. In 2023, heatwaves, wildfires, and extreme weather impacted popular tourist areas like Greece, Spain, and Hawaii. Experts say that tourism plays a role in climate change because it produces about one-tenth of the greenhouse gas emissions. Air travel, in particular, has seen a large increase in emissions.

To reduce these problems, some European countries have made changes. France, for example, banned short nights where a train journey of under 2.5 hours is possible. Belgium has added higher taxes for short nights, and other countries like Germany are discussing similar plans.

Another idea is the introduction of “carbon passports.” This means travelers would be given a yearly carbon limit to control how much they travel. By 2040, experts predict these passports could become real.

In addition to changing how we travel, people are choosing cooler destinations for their holidays. As heat increases, tourists are avoiding beach destinations and visiting countries like Ireland, Belgium, and Norway instead.

- A. Air travel has become the most popular way to travel in 2023.
