Task 3: Reading

The Night the Museum Came Alive

Last night, something strange happened. I was sleeping in my bed when I heard a loud roar. I opened my eyes — and I was not in my room anymore. I was inside a museum!

Around me were huge skeletons of dinosaurs, but they were not just bones — they were moving! One dinosaur, a velociraptor, looked at me and said,

"Don't be afraid. We're only alive at night."

I wanted to scream, but my mouth wouldn't move. Suddenly, a robot came rolling by and gave me a cookie. "Here," it said. "For bravery."

A big model of a T-Rex stepped down from its stand and walked past me. It looked scary, but it smiled kindly.

"We're just tired of standing all day," it said.

Then I saw something on the floor — a small bone. When I picked it up, the lights turned dark, and everything froze.
The dinosaur, the robot, the skeletons — all became still again.

Before I disappeared, I heard a voice whisper,

"A blind scientist built this museum. He couldn't see, but he believed... that dinosaurs still have stories to tell."

I blinked — and found myself back in bed.

Was it a dream? Or... is the museum alive at night?
