Listen and read.

Pocahontas and John Smith sat under a tree. They were talking about life in the city and the country.

John said, "There is a river in the city, and there are lots of trees."

Pocahontas said, "There is a river here too. And there are lots of trees. I like the city and the country the same."

Suddenly, John saw a raccoon in the tree. It was hungry! It climbed down the tree and took John's bread from his hand.

"No, the city and country are the same," said John. "We don't have any greedy raccoons in the city!"
