Sarah and William help their museum

Sarah has always wanted to be a photographer and her brother, William, wants to be a journalist. Their aunt came to visit them last Saturday and she gave Sarah a camera and William a tape recorder. Then they all went out to the town together.

Sarah took some pictures of lots of different people in the street.

When they came to the town's museum, they saw a lot of people in the street in front of it.

"What's the matter?" William asked some boys there. "The treasure that was in the museum is missing," said one boy. "A man came into the museum and stole it a few minutes ago and now everyone is looking for him," said another.

"What does he look like?" asked Sarah.

"They don't know, but he had a big red rucksack."

Then Sarah remembered her photos. She looked at the pictures in her camera and she saw one of a man who came out of the museum with a red rucksack on his back. William remembered that the man ran and jumped on the number 14 bus.

Sarah showed her picture to a policeman, and William told him about the bus.

The next day Sarah's photo was in the town's newspaper with a story that William wrote. It was about the policeman finding the treasure on the bus.

It's now back in the museum.
