- 1 Do you like to exercise? Why?
- 2 What exercises do students do at your school?
- 3 Does every student enjoy physical education class?

Introducing the Topic

All over the world, students are becoming fat. Over 18 percent of children in the United States are overweight. In China and South Korea, children are becoming overweight, too. One way to solve this problem is exercising in school. Physical education classes help all children stay healthy. But does everyone need them?

Should schools make students take P.E. class?

■ Đọc và gạch chân các lập luận hỗ trợ trong đoạn 2 và đoạn 3.

Thousands of schools do not have physical education (P.E.) classes anymore. Some people think that students should only study. However, other people think that students need to do physical activity at schools.

Students Should Take P.E. Class

First, exercise teaches many skills. Students make goals and work toward them. Team sports teach students to think and act together. Think about soccer. Students learn to make decisions as a group. They also learn to listen to others. These are important life skills. They cannot learn these only by studying in class. Second, exercising is as important as studying. Scientists found that exercising helps the brain to develop. This can help make students learn better. P.E. classes make sure that all students get this benefit.

Students Do Not Have To Take P.E. Class

For one, P.E. classes can make students too tired. Students become tired after P.E. class. They will not focus in other classes. Students may not learn enough and have bad test results. So P.E. classes are not helpful for their studies. Second, students should be able to choose to exercise or not to exercise. Some students do not enjoy exercising. They would rather play inside or study. Schools should respect the choices of these students. They should only let students exercise if they want to.
