Litecoin was among the first virtual currencies to be inspired by Bitcoin and follow its lead. Like Bitcoin and other cryptocurrencies, its coins are —only 84 million Litecoins will ever exist. Sometimes referred to as "the silver to Bitcoin's gold," it has been seen as less than Bitcoin. However, it is drawing more attention from developers.

Litecoin is based on an open-source global payment network that is not controlled by a central authority. It has a faster block generation rate than Bitcoin. Therefore, the time taken to transactions is much faster. Besides developers, a relatively small number of merchants accept Litecoin. One that will likely continue to hold Litecoin back is its lack of mainstream adoption.
