James works in the Sociology Department of a university. He is a researcher and often goes to different workplaces to interview people about various things. One day he went to a biscuit factory to interview female production line workers about how satisfied they were with their jobs. He approached a woman called Sara and started asking her questions. He asked her how long she had worked there. Sara told him she had been working there for fifteen years ever since she left school. He asked her what she did. She told him that she took packets of biscuits off the conveyor belt and put them into cardboard boxes. He asked her if she enjoyed working there. She told him she enjoyed it very much and that her co-workers were very nice and friendly and they had a good laugh together. Then he asked her if she ever found the work boring.
