Life in the Wild

Some animals in the wild are predators, like lions or wolves. They hunt and eat other animals, called prey. This is part of the natural food chain. Other animals, such as cattle, are raised by humans for food and farming.

To protect wild animals, some live in special areas called enclosures. These are made to be safe and comfortable for the animals. However, when animals are kept in captivity only for shows, it may be cruel.

Today, many species are in danger of extinction. People try to conserve nature and preserve biodiversity so future generations can enjoy it too. Learning about evolution helps us understand how animals change and survive over time. Some people also use animals to entertain, but not all ways of doing this are kind or fair.
