Living Outside the Box

While most teens spend their weekends hanging out with friends, sixteen-year-old Zara does something very different. She travels to local villages to teach younger children how to paint using natural materials.

Zara first discovered her love of art during a school project. "We were told to paint something meaningful," she says, "so I painted a scene from my grandmother's village." From that day on, art became her passion.

Zara's weekend workshops started small, but now she teaches over 30 children every month. "It's more than just painting," she says. "It's about showing them they can express themselves and be proud of who they are."
