Question 56-60. Read the passage and answer the following questions.

What about Esperanto?

When you think about an international language, what language do you think of? Maybe English? Certainly, lots of popular films and music are in English, and English is the most popular second language to learn, but there was a language invented to be even more international. That language is Esperanto. In 1887, a man called LL Zamenhof wanted to design a language that didn't come from any country and that was completely international. He came up with Esperanto. When he designed the language, he made it easy to learn but it wasn't always easy to find books or teachers in the past. You couldn't learn it at school either. But now, with the internet, it is much easier to find ways to learn Esperanto, like apps or programs. In fact, there are over a million speakers of Esperanto around the world. The most interesting thing is that you don't know where they might be - they aren't from a specific country! You have to join Esperanto groups to find other speakers. There are also a small number of people who have Esperanto as their first language. You might think this is impossible, but it can happen when parents don't have the same language. They learn a completely different one to communicate with at home. This is what happened to Vito. Vito is 17 years old. His father is from New Zealand and his mother is from Spain. "When my parents met, they couldn't communicate very well. My mother spoke the language of her home area and also Spanish, and my father only spoke English. He then learnt a little Spanish to help them talk to each other. When I was born, they didn't want me to have a favourite; English or Spanish. So, we all learnt Esperanto! It was the first language I knew. I then went to school in New Zealand and learned more English there." Vito also says, "It's really great having Esperanto as a first language. It's like having a secret code that only some people know. And there are great Esperanto groups online. They are full of people all around the world. We sometimes meet up. There is a group where you can find, and go and stay with, another Esperanto speaker in a different country. So, I can speak Esperanto and learn about a whole new place!"

56. In the first paragraph, what does the writer say about English?

- A. It isn't really an international language.
- B. Its aim is to be international.
- C. More people learn it than any other language.
- D. People can't learn it just through films.

57. Why did LL Zamenhof design Esperanto?

- A Because he didn't like his first language.
- B Because he thought most languages were too hard to learn.
- C Because he didn't like the language of his country.
- D Because he wanted an international language.

58. Why was Esperanto difficult to learn?

- |                            |                                   |
|----------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| A. There were no speakers. | B. There were no places to learn. |
| C. Nobody was interested.  | D. The books were bad.            |

59. What reason does the writer give for having Esperanto as a first language?

- A. The parents cannot speak another language.
- B. The parents enjoy learning new languages.
- C. It becomes the only shared family language.
- D. The family think it will bring new chances.

60. Where does Vito meet other Esperanto speakers?

- |                       |                       |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| A. on the internet    | B. in his own country |
| C. through his family | D. at meetings        |
