Living together: challenges and chores

Living with other people can be fun, but it also comes with responsibilities. Carla and her roommate Jason have been living together for three months. At first, everything was easy, but now they are facing some challenges. Carla often has to pick up Jason's clothes from the floor and clean up the kitchen after he cooks. Jason, on the other hand, complains that Carla never takes out the trash or buys groceries.

"I feel like I'm doing everything around here," Carla says. "I always have to mop up the floor and wash up the dishes. Jason just plays video games all day." Jason disagrees. "That's not true. I always hang up my coat, and I sometimes clean off the table after we eat," he says. Still, they both agree that things need to change.

After a long conversation, they decided to make a chore chart. Carla will take the trash out every Monday and Thursday, and Jason will put the dishes away and clean the bathroom. They also agreed to turn off the lights when leaving a room and to be more respectful of each other's time and space. "Living together means we must cooperate," Carla says. "We'll get better at this."

WRITING

Write a short paragraph (100–120 words) about your experience living with someone (a sibling, roommate, or family member). Include:

- What chores each person does
- A complaint and how you solved it
- Use at least 3 two-part verbs (e.g., take out, put away, clean up)
- Include 1 polite request using Could you... or Would you mind...?

Example:

Last year, I shared a room with my cousin. I usually had to clean up the floor and pick up his clothes. He never put away the dishes or took out the trash. I once said, "Would you mind helping me clean the kitchen?" and he agreed. We decided to divide the tasks: I would mop it up every Tuesday, and he would wash up the dishes. Now, we understand each other better.

SPEAKING TASKS

1. Role Play

- Practice with a partner. Then record the conversation and paste the link.
- Use https://vocaroo.com to record your voice.

A: Hey, could you help me clean up the living room? I'm expecting some friends over this afternoon and it's kind of messy.

B: Sure, no problem. But would you mind helping me take the trash out first? The bin is full and it really smells.

A: You're right. I'll grab the bag and we can take it out together. After that, I was thinking of mopping up the kitchen floor—it's a bit sticky from yesterday.

B: Good idea. And maybe we can put away the groceries I bought last night. They're still in the bags on the counter.

A: Absolutely. Also, could you hang up your coat? It's been on the chair for two days now.

B: Oops! Sorry about that. I'll hang it up right now. By the way, would you mind cleaning off the coffee table too? It's full of empty cups and crumbs.

A: Of course, I'll take care of that. Maybe later we should make a chore chart—so we don't let things pile up during the week.

B: That's a great idea! I'll take out the trash and vacuum, and you can wash up the dishes and clean the bathroom.

A: Perfect. Thanks for helping out—I really appreciate it.

B: Anytime! Let's finish and then relax with a movie?

A: Sounds like a plan!

Individual speaking

1. My chores at home

Talk about what chores you do at home, chores you dislike, and a polite request you've made. Use at least 2 two-part verbs and 1 polite request.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Example:

Hi, my name is Carolina. At home, I usually take out the trash and put away the dishes after dinner. I also have to clean up the living room on Saturdays. I don't really like mopping the floor because it takes too long. One time, I said to my brother, "Could you help me clean up the kitchen tonight?" and he agreed. We worked together, and it was faster. I think everyone in the house should share the chores—it's only fair!

2. A Complaint and a suggestion

Make a short complaint and give a polite suggestion using should, must, or have to. Start with: "One thing that bothers me is…"

Example:

One thing that bothers me is when my classmates leave trash on the desks after lunch. The classroom gets messy, and nobody wants to clean it. I think we should all pick up after ourselves. Also, the school must put more trash bins in the hallways so it's easier to keep things clean. If we all work together, the school will look much better.
