

Part 5

Questions 33 to 40 are based on the following texts.

Read the texts carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Malaysia's Top Dishes

A Mee Goreng Mamak

This Indian Muslim dish is the complete package. Yellow noodles, beef or chicken, shrimp, soy sauce, veggies and eggs. A bit of chilli tossed in for an irresistible jolt. Sounds simple, right? Sadly, you can try to replicate this one at home, but it's just not going to taste the way it did when you chowed down at that gritty Malaysian hawker stall.

B Apam Balik

You haven't truly experienced Malaysian food until you thrill your taste buds with this sweet treat. A pancake-style snack wedded with the compact package of an omelette, apam balik is stuffed with more than a sufficient amount of sugar, peanuts and the occasional sprinkle of corn – it's a dish that's constantly being reinvented.

C Nasi Kerabu

From the state of Kelantan in northern peninsular Malaysia, nasi kerabu gets its eye-grabbing colour from blue pea flowers, which are crushed and mixed into the rice. The aquamarine dish is topped with bean sprouts and fried coconut, then drenched in spicy budu, a fermented fish sauce.

D Ayam Percik

KFC's popularity in the region (and across Asia) over other fast-food chains won't surprise those familiar with ayam percik. It's barbequed chicken slathered in spicy chilli, garlic and ginger sauce mixed with coconut milk. With the right amount of percik sauce, this staple Malaysian stall food packs more zing than anything else.

E Nasi Lemak

Some call nasi lemak Malaysia's unofficial national dish. Everyone else calls it delicious. Nasi lemak is basically rice cooked in coconut milk. But it's the sides that matter. Depending on where you are in Malaysia, it comes with a variety of accompaniments such as hard-boiled egg, peanuts, vegetables, lamb/chicken/or beef curry, seafood and sambal (chilli-based sauce).

F Roti John

Whoever John was, it's apparent that he preferred his sandwiches made with grilled minced meat and egg in the middle of slim bread, and drowned in a confection of condiments. Mayonnaise, ketchup, barbeque and chilli sauce – choose one or choose them all.
