

A Day at the Park

It is a beautiful Saturday afternoon, and the park is bustling with people. The sun is shining brightly, and a warm breeze is rustling the leaves in the trees.

Over by the lake, an old man is feeding the ducks, and a little girl is trying to catch a fish with a tiny net. On the main path, a group of friends are cycling on their new bikes, laughing and talking. A woman is painting a beautiful picture of the lake and the ducks. She is wearing a big sun hat to keep the sun out of her eyes.

In the playground area, a lot of children are playing happily. Two boys are climbing a tall jungle gym, while a girl is swinging on a swing, going higher and higher. Their parents are sitting on benches, watching them and chatting with each other.

In the middle of the park, a musician is playing the guitar, and a small crowd is listening to his music. Some people are dancing to the rhythm. It is a perfect day, and everyone is enjoying the moment. All these actions—is bustling, is shining, is feeding, etc.—are happening now.
