    For the first time in history more than half the world's population resides in cities. The world's urban population now stands at 3.7 billion people, and this number is expected to double by 2050. The trend towards urbanisation is only getting faster and 96 percent of all urbanisation by 2030 will occur in the developing world. This global shift toward a more urban global population has profound implications for a wide range of issues including food, water, and energy consumption. The move towards urban concentration is a fact, and as city life becomes a reality for an ever- greater share of the world's population, governments, companies, and civil society must recognize that they are largely unequipped to deal with city-level problems.

    Urban growth presents an opportunity to connect more people to water and electricity, making them healthier and more productive. It also presents the risk of overwhelming various public goods, including power, infrastructure, health, and education as these systems adjust to increased demand. Urbanisation can be a positive, but if poorly managed will only amplify existing challenges. The recent Ebola virus outbreak in West Africa was an urban phenomenon, and was spread faster by poor municipal level systems, other risks, including gang violence and extremism leading to terrorism, can become worse in urban settings if not properly addressed.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions from 34 to 40.

Urban development and rural emptying are two sides of the same 21st-century coin, and are global in their extent. In the 19th and 20th centuries, as populations across the world grew fast, urbanisation processes didn't necessarily affect rural regions negatively. Some communities benefited from younger people moving out to seek employment, education, and marriage in nearby cities, as families often had more children than they could adequately support.

In the 21st century, however, as family size has shrunk dramatically nearly everywhere, the benefits of a growing population have come to an end in developed countries.

Japan has led the way in East Asia. In 1974, the Japanese total fertility rate fell below the population replacement rate of 2.1. Demographers would have known then that, should conditions persist, the country would eventually slip into depopulation. Sure enough, conditions did persist, and in 2008 Japan registered its first peacetime population decrease.

Although Tokyo's population is now 13 million, the Kanto region of which it is the core boasts more than 37 million people - 30% of the whole population of Japan. Elsewhere in the country, hundreds of rural villages face imminent extinction.

Japan is not unique. Greater Seoul has around 25 million people, nearly half of South Korea's population in one urban area with the rest spread out across the rest of the country. And in China, the Pearl River delta area, which encompasses Hong Kong, Shenzhen, Macau and Guangzhou, counts 100 million people living within it, while the wider country now boasts 155 cities with more than 1 million population.
