Life in Coober Pedy

Coober Pedy is a small town in South Australia. It is world-famous for its opals. Opals are colorful gemstones, and people have mined them here since the early 1900s.

The climate in Coober Pedy is very hot. In summer, the temperature is usually between 35 °C and 45 °C. Because of this, many people live underground. For example, Candice White and her husband live in an old mine. Inside their underground home, the temperature can stay cool, at about 20 °C.

The population of Coober Pedy is only about 1,500 people. Most people first came here to look for opals, and today the town is still called the "opal capital of the world."

Life in Coober Pedy is very unusual. People live and work underground. Visitors can stay in underground hotels, visit underground shops and churches, and even play golf on a desert course at night with glowing balls.
