

Tropical disappointment

Picture this: sandy beaches, palm trees, salsa music and pineapple juice. That's what I call a true paradise. OK, now you can forget _____ it. There is a great difference _____ planning a holiday and actually going _____ holiday. You see, _____ matter how carefully you have planned everything, holidays are always subject _____ change. Take what happened to me, _____ example.

I booked a ticket to Puerto Rico three months _____. You see, I have always _____ interested _____ Latin American music and Puerto Rico is 'an island with an extraordinary music culture', as my grandfather _____ to say.

Every time I _____ asleep, I would dream of infinity swimming pools, luxurious hotels and hospitable people amongst tropical fruit trees.

The problem is that my boss is very attached _____ his company and is very difficult to get days _____. 'Holidays,' he would always say 'are waste _____ time!' But I convinced my boss that I was suffering _____ stress and that a nice holiday would do wonders for me _____ well as for his company. In the end he agreed, _____ I made reservations, paid for everything _____ advance and was ready to go.

You can't imagine what happened next. As _____ as I got to the airport, I realised that all _____ to Puerto Rico had been cancelled due _____ a tropical storm that was heading towards the island. I couldn't believe I was so unlucky. Well, I guess my dream _____ visit Puerto Rico will remain a dream for now.
