In the vlog, Yasmin says they have stopped playing video <sup>1</sup>g_____ and instead are playing social deduction puzzles. These are games you play with a pack of cards. Each card has a different situation. The <sup>2</sup>r_____ are quite simple to follow. The players take <sup>3</sup>t_____ to present a situation. The <sup>4</sup>c_____ for the other players is to <sup>5</sup>g_____ what happened by asking questions. They get some <sup>6</sup>c_____ to help them, but they have to use their <sup>7</sup>s_____ to find the <sup>8</sup>s_____. This makes it difficult to <sup>9</sup>c_____. However, the game can still get quite <sup>10</sup>c_____.

After school, my friends and I play games for <sup>1</sup>_____. Our favourite game at the moment is Dungeons & Dragons. It's not a video game and you don't play online. All you need are some pencils and paper, and your imagination. Usually, around 4–6 people take <sup>2</sup>_____. You play it sitting round a table, but it's not a typical board game and players don't take <sup>3</sup>_____. However, there is a special book to help you <sup>4</sup>_____.

How does it work? Each player becomes an imaginary character and decides on their <sup>5</sup>_____ and abilities, such as strength or intelligence. The players are a team and have to discuss whenever they want to make a <sup>6</sup>_____. In the game they meet a number of <sup>7</sup>_____ and work together to solve a <sup>8</sup>_____, make a decision or find the <sup>9</sup>_____ to a problem.

They also roll dice to decide the result of some actions.

I like Dungeons & Dragons because it's not really a <sup>10</sup>_____ game. You work with your <sup>11</sup>_____, not against them.
