The most important holiday in China is the Lunar New Year. During this time, shops are closed and people celebrate by having parties, calling friends, and visiting temples or pagodas to make wishes for the coming year. Children join parades, carrying colourful lanterns and paper figures, while fireworks light up the sky. Families clean and decorate their homes, replacing old paper windows with new ones. It is also the time to pay off debts, as everyone wants to start the year fresh. Before New Year's Eve, houses are decorated with flowers, plants, and bright ornaments. These traditions bring families together and express hopes for happiness, good fortune, and prosperity in the year ahead.
