On an empty street in downtown LA, Mehmal Kasaar prepares for his next scene. As a highly trained professional, Mehmal is well-prepared for each stunt. He gives his equipment a critical gaze while the make-up artist checks his wig. (Today, he's standing in for a blonde Hollywood A-lister ... and Mehmal has black hair.) I ask him if he's ever lost his courage during a stunt? 'Not during, no,' he says. 'Sometimes before we start, I have lots of nervous energy. But when I'm riding a speeding bike, or clutching a balcony seven floors up, I have other things to think about!' Mehmal clearly loves the movie industry. I wonder, has he ever wanted to be a star in his own right? 'Oh no!' he says. 'Let those guys have the attention. At the end of my scene, I get to disappear and live my life – they're always on show, with the gossip and the paparazzi. I wouldn't want that! But does he ever watch himself on screen? 'Definitely!
