Read the text and answer the questions. Choose the correct answer:

How the Internet has changed the world

It all started in 1969 when Kline, one of Professor Kleinrock's students in LA, tried to log in remotely to a machine in Stanford.

In 1990, Tim Berners-Lee and Robert Dailliau introduced the "Worldwide Web". About 26 years later, 16 million people were online, and email was taking over. Today there are more than four and a half billion users.

E-mail, instant messaging and video calls connect people across the globe. Social networks allow people to communicate with a large number of friends and information is accessible to everyone online. All you need to do is "Google" a few key words and you get numerous sites and documents.

E-learning has made it possible for people to attend courses online and obtain academic and professional qualifications.
