READING PART: Questions about Annie McLean

Scottish Artist, Rooted in Her Hometown

Annie McLean is among Scotland's most renowned contemporary painters. Journalist Henry Lucas visited her idyllic island home.

Annie McLean grew up in St Andrews, on Scotland's east coast in Fife. She studied at the College of Fine Art in Edinburgh. Today, she lives with her husband Duncan and their three children on the Isle of Lohan. Their home is a 300-year-old farmhouse overlooking the sea. It is also a working farm where Duncan raises sheep, chickens, and pigs.

Annie specializes in painting animals and wildlife. "I paint what I see around me," she explained, pointing to birds, animals, trees, and flowers. She finds her work deeply engaging. Annie prefers to work outdoors, spending long hours in natural light—from sunrise to sunset in summer, sometimes as much as 16 hours a day, though winter days are shorter.

Her art is gaining recognition, and she is preparing to open a gallery on the island. "Right now I'm working on a series of wildflower paintings," she mentioned while sharing coffee in her studio.

The Isle of Lohan has around 700 residents, most employed in fishing. However, the population is shrinking as younger people leave in search of work. At the same time, the island is being transformed into a tourist attraction, welcoming about 50,000 visitors annually. Still, the island remains a peaceful refuge where Annie can find inspiration.
