Family Customs and Traditions

Customs and traditions play an important role in my family. We maintain them to strengthen each member's sense of belonging.

Firstly, we have a custom of going on a monthly camping trip. The purpose is to inspire a love of the outdoors in our children. We have found our favourite campsite and keep returning there, building many special memories together.

Secondly, there is the tradition of hunting Easter eggs. Instead of simply leaving baskets by the children's beds, we create a treasure hunt. We write the first clue, and the children follow it from one place to another until they discover their baskets. This tradition has been passed down for generations, making Easter an exciting and memorable holiday.

Finally, we celebrate Thanksgiving with a “Thankful Box.” Each family member writes down things they are grateful for and puts them in the box. Later, as we share dessert, the box is passed around and each note is read aloud. These heartfelt messages bring joy and laughter, reminding us how much we appreciate one another.

Our family loves these customs because they bring us closer together.

The Village Festival

Every year, people in my village look forward to the third day of Tet, one of our most important festivals. In the morning, we gather by the riverside to watch exciting competitions. First comes a special boat race. Some team members cook rice on the boat while others row as fast as possible. The team with well-cooked rice and the fastest speed wins. After that, the referee releases a duck into the river, and contestants jump in to catch it. The atmosphere is full of laughter, drumbeats, and cheers from the crowd.

At noon, there is a village party at the communal house for the elders. Families also hold home parties where we cook sticky rice, steamed chicken, and other traditional dishes. Sometimes, we prepare food that children love, such as bun cha or even pizza.

The festival is a meaningful time for everyone. It helps us keep our traditions, strengthen family bonds, and connect joyfully with neighbors and friends.
