Cultural differences occur wherever you go abroad. When visiting another country, you should always be aware of these differences and respect them. Here are some useful tips on how to fit in more easily. Every traveller to a foreign country feels awkward at some point, and sometimes your behaviour may make locals laugh. Don't worry too much — your best defense is a good sense of humour. If you can laugh off eating with the wrong hand in India, locals will usually be more accepting of you. Wearing proper clothes is another important rule, because people may judge you by what you wear. In some Middle Eastern countries, exposing too much flesh is strictly forbidden, especially for women. So, it's better to leave your short skirts or torn jeans at home. Also, be cautious about expressing emotions in public. For example, getting angry in Southeast Asia makes you look impolite, while in some countries kissing in public is considered inappropriate. Respect always helps you connect better with locals.

Different Lifestyles Around The World

My family moved to Sweden because of my dad’s job. I went to school there for a year. Well, I didn’t like it. The class was so noisy. Students would ask questions all the time. They spoke while the teacher was speaking and shouted at each other. They even sat under their desks. They sometimes called teachers by their first name. I thought it was rude! It’s quite different from studying in my country.

(Lan Tran, Viet Nam)

I went to a foreign country and stayed with my friend's family. When I arrived, they showed me a dog and asked: "Do you like this dog?" I said: "Yeah, yeah." When it was time for dinner, I went to the kitchen and saw a plate of steaming meat. I asked: "What is this?" and they all said: "Dog meat". Oh God! They cooked the dog! I said I liked the dog, and they cooked it. I started crying, and broke down at the table.

Thirdly, online classes provide access to a lot of useful resources such as videos, e-books, and practice exercises.
