The human brain is one of the most complex and amazing organs in our body. It controls everything we do - from thinking and learning to feeling emotions and moving our bodies. Although it weighs only about 1.5 kilograms, it contains billions of nerve cells that work together to process information.

Our brain has different parts that do different jobs. The cerebrum, the largest part, helps us think, remember, and make decisions. The cerebellum helps us with balance and coordination. The brainstem controls basic functions like breathing and heartbeat. Scientists are still learning new things about how our brain works every day.

To keep our brain healthy, we should get enough sleep, eat nutritious food, and exercise regularly. Learning new things and solving puzzles are also great ways to train our brain.
