Jangoi the Naughty Kid

Once upon a time, there was a boy named Jangoi. He lived with his parents on Penyengat Island. A small island in the Bintan bay where sailors stopped by for drinking water, taking supplies for long voyages.

Because the population was not yet crowded, at night it was very quiet on Penyengat Island. There weren't any good houses. The walls were full of holes. Beach houses with nibung floors were located far from each other. That's where the fishing village was. Almost every night, the men went out to the sea. Some went fishing, and some anchored nets on the beach reef. At home, almost every night, there were only women: housewives, grandmothers, daughters, and small children.

This situation was exploited by Jangoi. He was known to be very naughty. In the afternoon he liked to sneak in the bush near the well where the girls took bath. It so happened that the girls liked to take a shower at dusk. Jangoi liked to peek at the girls.

One night, Jangoi sneaked under a house. There the girls learned to read the Koran. Because the house on Penyengat Island was nibung-floored and usually had holes, it was easy for Jangoi to make fun of the girls by poking at them through the floor's gap. The girls screamed and told their parents about Jangoi's bad behaviour.

The villagers reported Jangoi's inappropriate behavior to the Sultan. His Majesty decided to hang Jangoi. Jangoi was hung by his neck, the Sultan asked him, "You will be hanged, Jangoi. What is your last request to us? Or your wish? Express it, we will fulfill it!" Then Jangoi replied, "Please forgive my lord, thousands of mercy. I only beg, when I die please cover my corpse with banana leaves." Jangoi's request was fulfilled by the Sultan. But at night after he was hanged and his body covered with banana leaves, people were shocked "Where is Jangoi's body? He disappeared! "

That night Jangoi harassed the girls on Penyengat Island again just like before. The villagers captured him again and brought him to the Sultan. "We just want you to die Jangoi, don't disturb the lives in Penyengat island again! Be responsible for what you did, Jangoi!" said the Sultan. Jangoi replied. "In that case, if indeed the fate of me is to die, then separate my head and my body." He then added. "After beheading, bury my head in the Bintan sandbar. Please bury my body in a small island in the waters of the Bintan coast too, " begged him.

Afterthat Jangoi was beheaded on the sandbar and his head was buried there too. The place was named "Beting Jangoi", located between Penyengat Island and Bintan. His body was buried in Los island, a small island located on the west coast of Bintan Island. Los Island was used as a guide to the reef, making it easier for ships to enter and exit the Tanjungpinang port. In the belief of a traditional sailor, the story of Jangoi was remembered throughout the ages.
