

Sangkuriang accepted the challenge. He used his supernatural powers to summon spirits and giants to help him. They dug the valleys and moved mountains. The boat was almost finished, and the water had nearly filled the lake bed. Worried, Dayang Sumbi prayed to the gods for help.

As dawn approached, she lit a fire in the east and spread red silk cloths to reflect the light. The roosters began to crow, and the spirits, thinking it was already morning, fled. Sangkuriang was furious. Realizing he had been tricked, he kicked the half-finished boat in anger. It flew through the air and landed upside down, becoming a mountain known as Mount Tangkuban Perahu, which means "the overturned boat."

From that day on, the mountain stood as a reminder of the tragic love between a mother and her son—a tale of fate, ignorance, and consequences.
