In today's world, social media plays a crucial part in many teenagers' lives. Platforms like Instagram, TikTok, and Facebook allow young people to connect with friends, share photos, and stay updated on trends. Many teenagers spend hours each day checking their phones and posting online.

One key reason teenagers use social media is to stay in touch with friends. They send messages, comment on posts, and like photos. Social media helps them feel connected, even if they cannot meet in person. Another reason is that teenagers use these platforms to express themselves. They share their thoughts, hobbies, and interests with a large audience. For example, some teenagers post videos of their art or share their favorite songs.

However, social media also has some negative effects. Spending too much time online can make teenagers feel stressed or left out. Seeing only the highlights of other people's lives can sometimes lead to jealousy or sadness. For some teenagers, though, sharing their thoughts online can be therapeutic. It allows them to express their emotions and feel better.

Even though there are some downsides, most teenagers believe social media is an essential tool in
