GET TO KNOW YOUR PET

a. Read the next article from The Times and answer the questions. What questions would you ask your pet if you could?

Jessica Roy writes for The Times about a growing trend of posting readings from animal communicators that transmit messages from animals.

Siena Filippi really wanted to know what her cat was saying. Ms. Filippi, a 26-year-old content creator and vintage store owner, had recently watched some videos on TikTok showing pet owners talking to animal communicators. The thousands of videos had started appearing consistently on her For You Page. She wondered, Why not get a reading for her childhood cat?

A friend of hers recommended Daniela Amato, a New Jersey-based animal communicator with her own social media presence. As part of her business, Heart Communications, Ms. Amato speaks to animals and performs reiki on pets. She's not a psychic, instead, according to her Instagram, "My goal is simply to transmit messages and be the channel for you and your animal companion."

Before their phone reading, Ms. Filippi sent Ms. Amato a photo of her cat and said he was named Bitty. What Ms. Amato told her surprised her. "The first message was that she wanted me to know from my cat that he knows that he's so handsome," Ms. Filippi said.

In a video of the phone call that Ms. Filippi posted on TikTok – which has been viewed more than 450,000 times – Ms. Amato confirms she has a pressing message from Bitty. "So he thinks he's very handsome," she said. "Beautiful, actually, and he says he is a gentleman as well." She also mentions his "sweet breath" – a side effect of medication he takes, Ms. Filippi said – and says he prefers spending time at Ms. Filippi's family beach house. And though his name is Bitty, he actually calls himself Leo.

"I really felt like the phrases she was saying and the information she was giving me reflected, kind of, the personality of my cat," Ms. Filippi said.
