

You have received an email message from your English-speaking pen-friend Jack:

From: Jack@mail.uk

To: Russian_friend@ege.ru

Subject: school conflicts

...So, about school conflicts, most of the time it's all about misunderstandings with classmates or group projects where everyone's got different opinions. I usually try to sort things out by just finding some common ground. It doesn't always work like magic, but it's a start. How do you usually handle conflicts with your friends or classmates? What are the most common causes of conflicts in your school? Do you think disagreements can sometimes be a good thing, like, help you grow or learn something new?

...Yesterday I had a fantastic time travelling online...

Write an email to Jack.

In your message:

- answer his questions;
- ask 3 questions about his virtual travel.

Write 100–140 words.

Remember the rules of email writing.
