Read the following passage about the Generation Gap in Vietnam and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 23 to 30.

Vietnam, like many countries, is facing a growing generation gap. As the country develops rapidly, the differences between older and younger generations are becoming more pronounced. The older generation, often born during the war and early years of socialism, values hard work, stability, and the importance of family traditions. In contrast, the younger generation is more focused on individual success, personal freedom, and embracing global culture.

One example of this divide is the role of technology. While many older people in Vietnam still prefer face-to-face communication and traditional ways of learning, younger people are increasingly turning to the internet for their education, work, and social interactions. This shift has led to misunderstandings and conflicts between the two groups.

Despite these differences, efforts are being made to bridge the gap. Many older people are now learning how to use smartphones and social media, while younger people are becoming more interested in traditional practices like cooking and family values. These efforts are helping to build mutual respect between the generations.

In the future, the success of Vietnam's modernization will depend on how well these generational differences are addressed. Finding a balance between tradition and progress will be key to maintaining social harmony and ensuring that all generations can live together harmoniously.

Read the following passage about The Relationship Between Parents and Children in Family Life and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 40.

[I] The relationship between parents and children is one of the most fundamental aspects of family life. This relationship is shaped by love, communication, and mutual respect. Over time, it evolves as children grow older and their needs change. Parents must adapt their roles to support their children's development and well-being.

[II] In early childhood, parents are the primary caregivers and play a crucial role in shaping a child's sense of security and trust. Children rely on their parents for basic needs such as food, shelter, and emotional support. A strong bond during these formative years lays the foundation for a positive parent-child relationship as the child grows.

[III] As children reach adolescence, their relationship with parents often becomes more complex. Teenagers begin to assert their independence and may challenge their parents' authority. While this phase can be difficult, it is also a crucial time for parents to guide their children, teaching them responsibility and decision-making skills. Parents need to balance their role as authority figures while fostering open communication and understanding.

[IV] Ultimately, the parent-child relationship is a lifelong journey. As adults, children may move away from their parents, but the emotional connection remains. Good communication and support continue to play an important role in maintaining a strong relationship. Parents, too, benefit from this ongoing connection, as they provide guidance and wisdom to their children throughout their adult lives.
