Dominic is studying photography at school and wants to learn more about how cameras work. He'd like to find out about photographers working in other countries, and see pictures that have won awards.

Photography websites

A PicSchool.com

PicSchool.com, run by photographer Alex Durrant, is great for learning how to build on existing skills. There's information about putting photos on posters or bags, and Alex suggests monthly topics for projects to complete, with helpful tips. This month's is 'Wildlife'; last month's was 'Photographing landscapes with your phone'.

B StudioFilm.org

StudioFilm.org looks basic at first, but has lots of useful detail, especially if you're interested in finding out about cameras with advanced functions. There are reviews of current exhibitions, and the Portrait Photographer competition was recently featured, so you'll see wonderful pictures of people and get ideas for your own work.

C PixelWorld.com

PixelWorld.com is well-known for publishing professional photos of famous people and their pets, taken on smartphones. See how it is done – all without an expensive camera. Take the perfect picture, and get information about choosing the best frame for it. If it's really good, you could even be 'Photographer of the Week' and win a prize.

D ClearPix.com

If you're taking pictures in different locations, then try ClearPix.com. There are articles written by the best photographers from all over the world. Each includes behind-the-scenes information about their amazing shots. This week, there's a new video about how Marion Jones took beautiful images of wild birds.

E CreativeLife.com

CreativeLife.com offers online lessons for photographers of all levels. Book anything from a one hour session to a three month course. You'll get to do projects and receive individual comments from experts. We also have helpful clips on subjects like family and friends, animals and landscapes, so you can improve your skills.

F PhotoWorld.org

PhotoWorld.org offers a huge range of detail no matter whether you use a top-of-the-range camera or a simple phone. There's lots of information about how to photograph beautiful countryside and different types of creatures. It's easy to find your way around the website and there's something for everyone.

G Image-store.com

This website has reviews on the latest cameras and recommends photography courses. There's a section showing the best pictures from top photography contests, so you're sure to get some great ideas. There are detailed articles on the technology used in cameras, and interviews with expert photographers who take pictures all around the world.

H LensStudio.org

The great thing about LensStudio.org is that you can find everything on it really easily. There's a section where you can post questions to our expert, Jon Houston. He recently won a wildlife photographers' competition with a picture of a dolphin. He gives tips for taking pictures in challenging conditions like those found in the ocean or in the mountains.
