

Reading part 3

TRAVEL

Person A:

I really enjoy traveling! Every time I go to a new place, I feel so excited and refreshed. Traveling gives me the chance to explore different cultures, meet interesting people, and learn new things. Also, when I travel, I often meet people who need help — like tourists who are lost or locals who need support. I love being able to help others in small ways. It makes the trip even more meaningful for me.

Person B:

That sounds great, but honestly, I don't travel much. My life is really busy with work and other responsibilities. I barely have any free time, so it's hard for me to plan a trip. However, technology helps a lot. For example, I don't need to go to the bank anymore — I just pay everything online. It saves me time, so I can focus on my work. Maybe when I'm less busy in the future, I'll take some time off to travel.

Person C:

I think traveling is not just about relaxing or having fun — it can also help us grow. For example, my mom always encourages me to join group activities and work in teams because it helps improve my communication and cooperation skills. When we travel in a group, we learn how to listen, share, and support each other. It teaches us responsibility and teamwork. So I believe traveling can be a good way to practice those important life skills.

Person D:

I love to travel, but for me, the biggest challenge is money. I don't have a lot of money right now, so I can't travel often. That's why I've started saving a little bit each month. I want to plan a trip with my family someday. Even if it's just a short trip nearby, I believe spending quality time with my family is more valuable than anything else. It's not about where we go, but who we go with.

Volunteering

A:

Some people enjoy volunteering abroad, but honestly, I feel most people are more interested in travelling. I believe we should use our time more meaningfully. Each town has many people in need. Their situations are difficult, and they don't have the means to improve their quality of life. They are individuals who have contributed a lot to the country. Sharing stories with them helps us understand the differences between generations. We can also broaden our knowledge about local history, traditions, and culture through their experiences.

B:

My mother told me to do local volunteering because she is part of that organisation, but I'm not into it. I prefer volunteering abroad because I can develop soft skills – something that will benefit my future career. Also, meeting new people helps me expand my network and create valuable connections I can use later in my professional life.

C:

I'm too busy and rarely have any free time to do anything, so spending even a few hours volunteering is difficult. I would have to take half a day off work. I see many people in need and they genuinely require some extra financial support. That's something I can help with because I earn a good salary. Making monthly donations is not a problem for me – it's how I show my support and contribution.

D:

I believe there are many ways we can show kindness through volunteering. I'm retired now, and I currently help build houses for people in need. I work with a volunteering organisation that already has clear plans in place. Through this work, I've had the chance to experience different foreign cultures. We're often sent to various countries to carry out these projects, so it's also a great way to travel while doing something meaningful. The job involves manual labour, so we're able to improve our physical health – something that some people only begin to notice after a while.

READING PART 4

TECHNOLOGY

A.

The way people interact with technology is constantly evolving. Modern devices and software are designed to be more intuitive, allowing users to communicate through voice commands, gestures, or even facial recognition. This redefinition helps make technology more accessible and natural to use, improving both personal and professional experiences.

B.

Smart automation tools are transforming workplaces by taking over repetitive and time-consuming tasks. These technologies, often powered by artificial intelligence, help employees focus on higher-value work, leading to increased efficiency and innovation across various industries.

C.

Educational institutions are increasingly incorporating technology into their curricula to prepare students for future careers. Programs that focus on coding, robotics, and digital literacy equip learners with essential skills needed in the digital age, fostering creativity and problem-solving abilities.

D.

While digital devices offer many benefits, excessive dependence on screens can have drawbacks. People may experience reduced social interaction, attention difficulties, and increased stress. It is important to balance digital engagement with offline activities to maintain mental and physical well-being.

E.

Not everyone has equal access to technology, which can create significant social and economic gaps. Those without reliable internet or modern devices may miss out on educational and job opportunities, making it essential to address these disparities through policy and community initiatives.

F.

Tech communities bring together individuals passionate about technology to share ideas, support projects, and collaborate. These groups foster innovation and creativity, providing mentorship and resources that help turn new concepts into reality.

G.

As technology continues to advance, there is a growing emphasis on sustainability. Companies are developing eco-friendly products and adopting green practices to minimize environmental impact, ensuring that digital progress supports long-term ecological health.
